GREENE NAFTALI

CULTURED

11 Gallery Shows by Living Legends on View This Month in New York

Come in from the cold for new exhibitions by Jasper Johns, Doris Salcedo, and Yoshitomo Nara, who returns to the city after nearly a decade.

Lubaina Himid, Heroic Mistakes, 2026. Photography by Gavin Renshaw, courtesy of the artist, Hollybush Gardens, and Greene Naftali. © Lubaina Himid.

As winter prepares to sweep through New York, stealing the leaves off trees and chilling the air, let these upcoming shows by living legends brighten the dreary days ahead. Many of these major artists are returning to New York after years away. From Jason Moran's teetering pianos to Doris Salcedo's human hair structures, their shows offer plenty to look forward to as our clocks fall back.

Daffey, Schuyler. "11 Gallery Shows by Living Legends on View This Month in New York." Cultured, November 2, 2026: Web.

“Low Key Shrines: French Paintings and German Ceramics” by Lubaina Himid

Where: Greene Naftali

When: Opens Nov. 12

Why It’s Worth a Look: “Low Key Shrines” presents a new body of work from Lubaina Himid, the acclaimed British artist representing the U.K. at this year’s Venice Biennale. The exhibition dissects the meaning of commemoration, as Himid reimagines the public landmarks and domestic altars we erect to honor the dead.

Know Before You Go: Himid is one of the founding figures of the British Black Arts Movement. From the 1980s onward, she has dedicated herself to organizing exhibitions that uplift the community’s work in institutional settings and other spaces that have long been closed to them.

Daffey, Schuyler. “11 Gallery Shows by Living Legends on View This Month in New York.” Cultured, November 2, 2026: Web.